

ERIN HAMMOND

Erin Hammond was born in 1982 in Milwaukee, WI. She studied Fine Art at University of Wisconsin Parkside. Erin moved to Los Angeles in 2010. In 2013 she was a top-rated artist in RAWawards, the largest indie art competition in the US.

Erin Hammond engages the art historical subjects of the nude and the society portrait through the syntaxes of fashion sketch and abstraction. Many of her artworks are first created by writing about her characters, then transformed into sketches, and finally rendered into complete visual compositions.

She alternates layers of pencil, charcoal, and acrylic, combining an active interest in the female body with experiments in color and shading. Hammond predominantly works directly on wood, allowing the textures to puncture her surfaces. Her artworks on canvas exhibit a softer rendering of her subjects. Her background in both film and fashion allows Hammond to use the unfinished elements of her aesthetic to explore the contemporary fascination with (im)perfection latent in those professions.

“I am influenced by the existence and process of life,” she says. “My desire is to translate visually what I see physically and spiritually. Through a collaboration of styles and approaches I will always be changing through process after process. Respectively I tend to focus on the roughness of line and the immediate processes of painting. As we are unfinished beings, in the process of completion, my paintings reflect that concept as I overlap with paint and pencil lines, overworking some areas and leaving other areas unfinished. I would like the viewer’s imagination to bring the piece to its own completion.”

Her artworks have been exhibited at numerous international art fairs and galleries. They have found a place in major private collections worldwide.
