

JONAS FISCH

Born in a small fisherman’s village in southern Sweden, Jonas Fisch paints with a jazz-like spontaneity, expressing personal emotions, commenting on contemporary society, and exploring old mythologies.

His process is instinctive and organic, the paintings energetic and vibrant, emerging from his subconscious without judgment. They are constructed by feelings trying to find a harmony. Endless figures, messages, layers and symbols move in and out of focus as the eye explores his puzzle pieces with multiple solutions.

“As a fundamentally introspective person I have an explosive need to express and communicate my innermost rays, reflections, and shadows. The brush allows me to explore my own subconscious, to examine, confront and process my innermost feelings. I usually don't have a preconceived vision, but rather a strong idea or a general notion of what I want to create.” Fisch says of his work, “I put a lot down, I take a lot away, until I feel there’s a harmony, energy and a flow. Sometimes it's past or present events that become vibrant, buzzing commentary on society - expressed in figures, words and shapes. Other times it's personal experiences and emotions that flood my mind and drip onto the canvas. I try and not to judge or censor what comes up and at a certain point the painting comes alive, takes on a life of its own and reveals itself. It's the point of no return and I have no choice but to paint it.”

Fisch has exhibited across the United States, Switzerland and Hong Kong. His paintings can be found in private collections worldwide.
