MAURO OLIVEIRA

Mauro Oliveira was born in Sao Paulo, Brazil and raised on the outskirts under extreme poverty. He grew up with 6 siblings with no running water or electricity. After both of his parents died in their 30s, Oliveira was sent to live in a military state-run orphanage. When he was nine-years-old he developed a relationship with a woman who visited the orphanage looking to adopt. She adopted another child, but told him that if he stayed out of trouble and worked hard he would make it to the US one day. At 10-years-old he took advantage of the free tin piggy banks given by banks and encouraged other kids to paint them with him in order to sell at a weekend art fair in Sao Paulo. Thousands of these painted piggy banks were sold.

He made it to college and won a student exchange program contest sponsored by the Federal University of Uberlândia, Brazil. He studied Journalism and the Arts and immigrated to the US in 1990.

Oliveira's artworks have been exhibited in many international cities, including Sao Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Miami, San Francisco, New York, San Diego, Palm Springs, Hong Kong and Los Angeles.

Best known for his geometric work done with automobile detailing vinyl tapes, Oliveira also creates three-dimensional wall artworks that resemble floating sculptures, creatively incorporating objects such as color pencils, pens, watercolor tablets, paper clips, rubber bands, wax, metals or other everyday materials. All his artworks are covered in an immaculate and glossy resin finish.

Inspired by nature, colors and geometry, he cites Pablo Picasso and Joan Miro as his greatest influences. Oliveira likes to believe that he created his own eclectic style, using materials never used before for art.
